

Commitment to Preventing and Responding to Gendered Violence

If you are experiencing, or have experienced, gendered violence, we want you to know that you are not alone. We will listen to you, believe you, and treat you with dignity and respect. Your safety, choices and wellbeing matter. We will work alongside you to support your goals, connect you with the right help, and create a safe and supportive environment where you can heal, rebuild confidence, and move forward at your own pace.

Outcare works to address gendered violence and the inequalities that drive it. We understand that gendered violence stems from unequal power dynamics, societal attitudes, and systemic barriers, and we act at the individual, service, community and system levels.

Guided by evidence, established practice and human rights principles, we also recognise the importance of lived experience and builds a workforce that reflects this insight. Our trauma-responsive, survivor/ person-centred, and strengths-based approach prioritises safety, respect, and choice, particularly for women and children. By centring victim/survivor voices and working with partner services, we deliver coordinated, effective responses that support healing, dignity, and lasting safety.
